

Terence Keel is a Professor of Human Biology & Society and African American Studies at the University of California, Los Angeles. Keel has written widely about the history of racism and its connections to science, medicine, politics, and American culture. Keel is the Founding Director of the Lab for Biocritical Studies—an interdisciplinary space committed to studying discrimination, inequality, and resilience among vulnerable populations. He also serves as the Advisor for Structural Competency and Innovation within the UCLA David Geffen School of Medicine. For more information, please visit www.terencekeel.com

(see headshot below)

